Academic Program Overview

Immerse yourself in the art of photography with Summer Springboard at NYSID's Photography in the City course! Designed for aspiring photographers, this class offers a comprehensive introduction to the fundamentals of photography, including lighting and composition. Under the guidance of an award-winning instructor from the famous New York School of Interior Design, you'll explore both exterior and interior spaces across the vibrant backdrop of New York City. Gain practical experience while capturing the essence of urban life through your lens. Join us to refine your skills, express your creativity, and see the city from a new perspective!

Earn College Credits: Seize the chance to earn one college credit applicable towards an undergraduate degree at NYSID or for inclusion in your future college applications.

Excursions

Students will use their smartphone or digital camera to capture interiors and exteriors at locations such as Hudson Yards, the High Line, Central Park, and the World Trade Center.

Instructor

Prepare for an exciting adventure as the current faculty of the New York School of Interior Design takes the helm in teaching the pre-college summer program. This unique opportunity offers a glimpse into the authentic student experience at the university, providing you with a taste of what it's like to be a part of the NYSID community.

Keith Williams

Keith Williams is an award-winning architectural photographer. He has extensive knowledge and experience photographing both finished projects and documenting works-in-progress. He photographs buildings and urban landscapes in the New York metropolitan area devoting himself to mastering the light, scale and palette of buildings in local contexts.

Keith's passion for capturing captivating photos shine through his portfolio. You'll learn from a real professional and discover your own preferred style of photography.
